

Exhibit 69

REUTERS

World

Business

Markets

Breakingviews

Video

More

U.S. MARKETS

JANUARY 15, 2015 / 7:13 AM / UPDATED 7 YEARS AGO

Swiss franc jumps 30 percent after Swiss National Bank dumps euro ceiling

By Patrick Graham

Swiss Franc banknotes of several values lie on a table before being sorted in a money counter in a Bank in Zurich August 16, 2011. REUTERS/Arnd Wiegmann

LC U.S. election workers get little help from law enforcement as terror threats mount euro on Thursday after the Swiss National Bank abandoned its three-year old cap at 1.20 francs per euro.

In a chaotic few minutes on markets after the SNB's announcement, the franc broke past parity against the euro to trade at 0.8052 francs per euro before trimming those gains to stand at 1.0350 francs.

It also gained 25 percent against the dollar to trade at 0.8900 francs per dollar.

The SNB has been resisting heavy pressure in recent months on the cap it imposed in September 2011 on the stellar rise seen in the franc's value due to investors seeking a haven from the euro zone's economic and political troubles.

The prospect of outright money-printing by the European Central Bank as early as next week has added to the pressure, with the SNB seen by players in the market as buying euros consistently around 1.2009 francs per euro in recent days.

"It has taken the market by complete surprise," said Jonathan Webb, head of FX strategy at Jefferies in London.

"The SNB probably expects the ECB to launch QE next week and along with the Greek elections coming up, it would make it pretty tough on the Swiss to keep bidding the euro. So they have abandoned the cap and cut rates deeper into negative territory. We expect euro/Swiss to trade around 0.90-1.00 francs after all the stop loss orders have been cleared."

Reporting by Patrick Graham; editing by Nigel Stephenson

Our Standards: The Thomson Reuters Trust Principles.

U.S. election workers get little help from law enforcement as terror threats mount

App...

Do Not Sell My Personal Information

All quotes delayed a minimum of 15 minutes. See here for a complete list of exchanges and delays.

© 2021 Reuters. All Rights Reserved.

U.S. election workers get little help from law enforcement as terror threats mount